

Patrick Roach

The Artist's Voice

"I'm a singer - songwriter who always seeks to gain more knowledge to enhance my musical abilities. The goal is to keep working on my craft, to find ideas and the edge that will take me to the next level where I can help and inspire others through my lyrics.

As a son of Grenadian soil with a natural affinity for reggae music, I try to remain consistent and committed, to add to Grenada's rich culture by complimenting the music genres already alive in Grenada with my music."

Biography

Growing up for Patrick was not easy as he experienced four different foster homes not knowing who his mom was till about the age of seven. Life then, too, was marked by a completely absentee father as he matured into a young man. However, these tough times became life lessons to build upon and learn from. He grew to appreciate his secondary school and church experiences, and surely, life began to take a positive turn for him when he was introduced to the bass guitar.

When it comes to musical instruments though, his first love remains the drums upon which he is self-taught. The more he practiced these two instruments, the more he felt his calling ... music. He started going to church and getting involved with the church band. Playing music with the church band made him feel whole, made him feel as if he belonged to something bigger than himself. From that, a talent that was hidden as nurtured and came alive and he has not stopped Music became an outlet for Patrick to express himself when he had originally grown without a voice.

Today, as he continues musical journey, he is inspired by daily living: his family, the experiences he has with friends, and other musicians such as Romain Virgo, Beres Hammond, and Christopher Martin.
